

Research Assistant / Doctoral Student in Monetary Economics

Ghent University - Department of Financial Economics (Belgium)

The department of Financial Economics at Ghent University has one or more positions available for research assistants or doctoral students in the fields of monetary economics, monetary policy and exchange rates.

The research assistants or doctoral students have to provide some support for the courses on monetary economics and monetary policy. The most important task, however, is the preparation of a PhD dissertation in monetary economics.

Candidates should hold a Master degree in economics or are about to obtain this degree by the end of the academic year.

Applications should be sent to:

Prof Gert Peersman
Ghent University
Department of Financial Economics
W. Wilsonplein 5D
B-9000 Gent
Belgium

Applications should include a cover letter, CV, details of the master courses taken (including grades), two letters of reference and, if possible, some examples of research work (assignments).

For more information about the positions, you can contact Gert Peersman (gert.peersman@ugent.be).
